OF FACTS

better than we theirs. With them facts were not regarded as of serious moment compared with legal points or oratory; a knowledge of affairs was often either wholly wanting, or business matters and results were treated with indifference, or despised as beneath the consideration of a gentleman at the bar; the result of a trial was a victory or defeat for the lawyer; its result to the litigant a mere incident to the contest. Practical affairs were often lost sight of in flights of eloquence, not to say bombast; but sometimes this was rudely checked, as when, on an occasion in a city of the Commonwealth, two of the most distinguished of these oratorical lawyers; in discussing some question of public interest; described a famous preacher, who held adverse views, as a "Quixotic parson; whereupon the parson, replying, admitted the fitness of the comparison, and said he was long and lank like the Don, rode a lean horse like Rosinante, and most remarkable of all, like the famous knight, he was spending his time fighting "To illustrate further, I have seen two conveyances of property, of large value

"To illustrate further. I have seen two conveyances of property, of large value for that period, which were drawn conjointly by two of the ablest and most distinguished of our anti-belium lawyers, men whom we drevere and at whose feet we have been sitting for years and do now sit, and yet, neither paper would now be accepted by an intelligent business man, and if drawn by a law sudent would bar his graduation from a respectable law school, and his right to a license to practice.

Mr. Hamilton pointed out plainty and in a highly interesting way, the changes that conditions in Virginia have undergone, and continued:

The capacity to recognize and value a fact is essential to a successful lawyer; without it theories of law are worse than worthless. If we are to value facts we must applied the what they are. A sufficient definition is, "A fact is a real state of things, as distinguished from a statement of belief"; "an actual physical or rifental event, or existence, as distinguished from a legal effect or consequence."

To know our facts befter and to value them justly is necessary to preserve even our preservent meagre subsistence. What shall be done to promote this desired end, Require broader and more thorough education, particularly in the physical sciences, as preliminary to the study of the law; study people and things more. "The gods sell everything good for labor."

Jabor."
There was hearty applause at the conclusion of the reading of Mr. Hamilton's paper, and in the midst of it the members began coming forward and congratulating the president of the association upon the wisdom and the appropriateness of the views he had expressed.

Condition of the Association.

Condition of the Association.

The chair announced standing committees and reports of committees were received. Air. Eugene C. Massle, of Richmond, the secretary and treasurer of the association, reperied the present membership of the association fits 50. Of this number fifty-light were honorary members, leaving an active membership of 42. A number of lawyers are seeking admission. The report shows that there is a balance in the treasury of $359.16. The association, says the report, is in sound financial condition.

The report of the Executive Committee, read by the chairman, Mr. A. W. Patterson, of Richmond, recommended an amendment to article seven of the constitution so as to give the committee more latting in the selection of a date for the convention. The committee is at present restricted to the months of July and August. Attention was called to the fact that sessions of the associations of some States are held in winter, and that the season is uniformly fine. The report concluded with a reminder that the terms of R. Tate Irvine, of Bis Stone Gap, and O. D. Batcheller, of Newport News, as members of the committee expired this year.

Dr. Alderman's Letter.

The follewing letter was read from President Alderman, of the University of Virginia, regretting the inability of Mrs. Alderman and himself to accept the invitation of the Executive Committee to be present at the convention:

Eagle Bay, N. Y., July 23, 1991.

My Dear Mr. Massie, You must know how genuinely my wife and I appreciate the invitation of the Virginia State Bar Association to be their guests at 161 Springs on August 1, 1994. We appreciate not only the courtesy and kingless of the invitation, but also the work in the formulation in 12 June work of laying down the duties of the president of laying down the duties of the president of Tulene University. I beg you will present our regrets and compliments to the Virginia State Bar Association.

EDWIN A AIDERMAN, There was a ripple of applause when the name of Dr. Alderman was first mentioned, and more pronounced enthusiasm when the convention had heard the sentiments expressed in the letter.

Legislation and Reform

Legislation and Reform.

Legislation and Rcform.

Hon William A. Jones, member of Congress from the First District, presented the report of the Committee on Legislation and Law Reform. Mr. Jones said that while he did not endorse the doctrine of "stand patism" in politics, the term represented the nature of the report. The committee was not prepared to advocate the enactment of any new laws or the report did advocate the appointment by the General Assembly of a commission of able lawyers, who should revise and recodily the laws of the State. He thought this commission should be given two or three years in which to do the work. The report called attention to the fact that the Code has not been revised for seventeen years, and that in that time there has been an immense amount of new legislation as a result of the adoption of the new Constitution.

Martin P. Burks, dean of the law school of Washington and Lee University and chairman of the Committee on Legal Education and Admission to the Bar, presented the report of that committee, in which he said that the present system of admitting to the bar after examination by the judges of the Supreme Court was lie best the State had ever had. In the past year ninety-seven young men have taken the examination for admission, and eighty-one have been admitted. In reply to a humorous remark from President Hamilton, Professor Burke said: "In sever saw but one of those examinations that I could have passed mysecit." This frank confession from one of the most distinguished teachers of law in this country caused considerable laughter.

Judge A. W. Wallace, of Fredericksburg, chairman of the Committee in presentinguished teachers of law in this country caused considerable laughter.

Time and Place.

Time and Place. Mejor Stickley submitted the amendment to the constitution allowing the Executive Committee to fix the date of holding the convention and one or two minor amendments to the by-laws.

Secretary Massle, in discussing the proposed amendment, said it had been proposed in charter a steamer and take the association to Boston on a trip, in the course of which the convention could be held. He thought the acheme attractive. "Suppose we should go down." somarked a member.

"In that case I should hope we would go up," replied Mr. Massle.

Colonel W. W. Old, of Norfolk, thought July or August the best season for the convention, and advocated alternate sessions being held at the season. He thought the up-country members had an incorrect idea that the weather of July and August was uniformly suffocating at the seaside. Such was not the case, he declared, and the health of the members of the association attending a convention at the season would be just as good as if they were in the mountains. Mr. Frank T. Glasgow, of Lexington, wanted to know who had proposed to give the Executive Committee carte blanche to fix the time of meeting, and President Hamilton laughingly responded that he had signed the proposed amendment at the order of the secretary of the association at the committee, said he had heard the seashore objected to only because of the heat. He thought the bar of Richmond could better attend in the month of June than in July, as they were all busy in the latter month clearing up work in anticipation of the vication which the courts of the city took in August. He mentioned the fact that four Circuit Courts are in session to-day.

The convention attested its appreciation of the paper of Mr. Richards by great applause when he concluded, and he was warmly congratulated.

CHESTERFIELD, VA., August 2.—The annual meeting of the county achool board was held here to-day, nearly all of the members being present. The report of the finance committee, which met here on yesterday and audited and passed on the school accounts for last session, was read to-day and adopted by life board. The report shows a balance in the county treasurer's hands of upwards of 4000 with which to begin next year's work. The total expense of last session's work was about $20,000.

declared, so that all teachers may be privileged to attend.

The board decided that the county school fund should be apportioned per capita to the several magisterial districts. The matter of compulsory vaccination was left to the discretion of the individual district boards. It was ordered that the trustees of Ettrick subschool district be allowed & each per year for their services, and that the county treasurer be allowed a compensation of one per cent. for disbursement of the State school fund.

The county jall now holds about eighteen prisoners, two-thirds of whom are charged with felony and awaiting inc investigation of their cases by a grand jury. The regular grand jury terms have not yet been settled upon for this county, but there will doubless be one ordered for the next term, beginning in September. The long gap between the last and the next term of the Circuit Court has occasioned the accumulation of much work for the September term.

A basket picnic will be held at Oak Grove Academy, in Matoaca District, on August 11th, for the benefit of Evergreen Sunday school.
